THE LOVELY PEACH.

Southwest Missouri Laden With the Lucious Fruit.

The peaches are coming into town Their lucious ripeness offers no suggest tion of the July drouth and, although the peach a ason is late throughout the state, the crop is magnificent as to quality and quantity is not to be complained of if the earlier arrivals are fairly representative of the whole, says the Wort Plains Guzette.

The Missouri peach, levely to the eye and delightful to the palate, may well be reconsed as one of the best gifts of bounteous nature to this state. Aside forms the planars there is a constant to the state. Aside forms the planars to one who from the pleasure it gives to one who sees the beautiful in nature it has more substantial claims to consideration to the commonwealth. In southern Missouri the peach has attained to a degree of perfection that was not thought possible a few years ago,

Modern methods of culture and transportation have developed the Missouri peach until it now has a standing in all the markets second to few at least on this side of the Atlantic. "Spare the pruning knife and spoil the peach," is a maxim that has done the most for it is the state. The peach growers have gotten over the horror they once had of cutting two-thirds of the blossoms and giving the remaining peaches a chance. The result of this sacrifice of the promise of the trees has been infinitely finer fruit and a much larger yield. We have not yet arrived at that stage of fruit cultore where we can produce the delicious fruit of France. There the peach tree is cultured to grow against the wall with a southern exposure. The tree is flattened against the wall and is pruned till a dozen or less peacnes are left. But the dozen are of such negnificent size and rare flavor that they command unheard of prices.

Missouri has not yet arrived at this refined stage of peach culture and the value of the ; each crop is not equal to satisfactory. #### that Carries a Moral With it.

The following from the "Dry Goods Economist" well illustrates why people should buy from their home stores where they see what they are getting before they buy it, and have a chance to compare it with other goods at the same

"Why is it that the mail order business as conducted by the strickly mail order houses is profitable, while the mail order business of the department stores is generally, if not invariably,

"It is hardly worth while to go into the accuracy of our postulate that mail orders in department stores do not pay, The Economist has long ago dealt with the question; John Wanamaker testified to the same fact before the Federal Industrial Commission, and one house in New York attempts to head off this kind of business by advertising from time to time that mail orders will not be filled

"Broadly, the explanation may be phrased thus: The mail order depart sell the quality of goods handled by limpairs farmer at Tarkin. Atchison mail order concerns put forth. Their telephone system, and he can sit in his an managers are certainly experts. If offlice in the rear of his bank at Tarkio, they are not in receipt of big salaries they ought to be."

FARMERS.

THEY ARE NO LONGER ISOLATED FROM THE WORLD.

Rural Delivery and the Telephone Have Brought Them in Close Touch With Their City Cousins.

Alonzo Burt, manager of the Missouri use it as frequently and as advantageously as the busiest man in the largest

He now has upon the road men who do nothing but visit farmers, and try to convince them of the utility of the telephone. They have met with surprising success. Already several hun have put them in have ordered them dred 'phones have been placed in farm houses in the territory tributary to Kansas City, Mr. Burt exp ets the number to continue to increase as rapidly and constantly as their use has in this city. How rapidly and constantly this is the figures show. Five years ago 5,000 telephones were in use in Kansas City, and an average of twelve calls per day was received over each of them. Now, there are 6,800 in the city, and an average of twenty calls per day is received over each of them, making a total of about 133,000 calls received and answered at the main and branch offices during every twenty four hours. In most cases the farmers 'phone is on a party line. The service of farmers on a party line costs on the average only about $7.50 Sixth and Wyandotte, and at night each. They have to pay the usual rates of course for talking over the toll line.

In Touch With the World.

"The farmer is finding," said Mr. Burt yesterday, "that he has as much use for the telephone as any body. He is harder to induce to adopt it than the average business man, but few who out again. The extension of rural delivery routes is helping our business. They are making it unnecessary to go to town overy day for the mail. The carrier is allowed to deliver goods to people along his route; and by calling up his grocer or dry goods dealer the farmer can order what he needs, have the carrier bring it out and thus save himself a trip."

Few people have any idea as to the number of operators required to attend to the calls turned into the switchboards of the Kansas Uity exchanges. When the new office at 1621 Main street begins twenty-five are kept busy on the toll lines. During the day about seventyfive girls work in the main office at about half this number. The proportion between the day and night shifts is the same at the branch offices. The pay of operators ranges from 75 cents per day, the amount given beginners, to
